THE ENGLISH DISASTER.

The boasted safety of the English railroads was given a terrific setback Sunday morning when a train on the London Southwestern jumped the track, killing twenty-three passengers instantly and seriously wounding many more. All accounts agree that the train was being operated at a rate of speed far in advance of the safety line. One of the railroad's regulations was that no trains should be run at this particular point at a greater speed than thirty miles an hour. It is the consensus of opinion that this particular train was speeding at more than sixty miles an hour. The only way to account for this fact is on the theory that the engine driver who, with his fireman, was instantly killed, must have suddenly lost his mind.

Such heavy loss of life would be deplorable under any circumstances, but the disaster is brought home to the people of the United States with much greater force because of the fact that twenty of the twenty-three dead and seven of the injured were Americans. And most of them were Americans of prominence in their home cities. The wrecked train was carrying passengers from an American line steamer, they having disembarked at Plymouth to go to London. Many more would have taken the train had the boat not been most fortunately, several hours behind scheduled time, thus making it necessary for those desiring to take the train to get off the ship at a late hour in the evening.

It is difficult for Americans to conceive how there could be such great loss of life in such an accident. The train was run for first-class passengers and the equipment was, or should have been, first-class in every particular. Such a train in the United States would have been made up entirely of Pullmans. The dispatches say the bodies of the coaches were stripped from the trucks and piled in indescribable confusion. Such a thing could not under any conceivable circumstances happen to a first-class train in this country.

A somewhat similar wreck, it will be remembered, occurred in the United States some months ago when one of the eighteen-hour fliers between New York and Chicago was wrecked at Mentor, Ohio. On this occasion the train left the track on account of an open switch and crashed into the station building. There was loss of life only in one of the passenger cars, that nearest the engine, and this in spite of the fact that the train was running at a speed greater than sixty miles an hour.

FRENCH JUSTICE.

Our compliments to the French ministry of justice. It is no respecter of persons. A few days ago it announced its decision in the case of young Elliott F. Shepard, sentenced to serve three months in jail for running over and killing the child of a peasant father and mother. The decision is that the sentence may be commuted to six weeks in prison but that Shepard certainly must serve this length of time. The history of the case is, perhaps, familiar, but it will bear repetition.

Shepard is 30 years old, very wealthy and a grandson of W. K. Vanderbilt. He has in late years devoted his time exclusively to an effort to see just how fast he can drive an automobile. He was scorching over one of the French roads when he ran over and killed the child. His prosecution followed. In addition to the jail sentence he was directed to pay some thousands of dollars to the parents of the child. This he did without demur. The fight has been on the jail sentence.

The case, according to the evidence brought out, was a particularly aggravated one. Several witnesses swore that he was traveling at the rate of eighty miles an hour when the child was killed and that he continued to drive at that rate without stopping to see what the result of the accident was. The presiding judge scored him mercilessly, declaring that "American autoists had acquired the habit of running down French peasants as mercilessly as if they were chickens. Every influence that wealth and position could bring to bear was used on behalf of Shepard, both during the trial and after the conviction. Now, however, it appears that the French department of justice is inexorable. Shepard must go to jail."

And we have no doubt that a great majority of Americans will entirely approve the sentence. If Shepard had been without money or influence he would have served out his term long since. Perhaps a much severer sentence would have been imposed. Let it once be heralded abroad that he is in prison for his offense and there will be no effort on the part of American or other autoists to break the French laws regulating the ownership and operation of their cars.

THE ELUSIVE DIAMOND.

Gardner F. Williams, general manager of the DeBeers diamond mines in South Africa, has an interesting article in the current National Geographic Magazine on the subject of diamond mining. Mr. Williams tells of the difficulties attendant on the search for the gems and while most people are aware that one doesn't find them easily, it will be a revelation to many to learn just how much work is required. For example, Mr. Williams says that every year 4,000,000 tons of blue ground are washed in the DeBeers mines every year in order to secure a quantity of diamonds that could be put in a box two feet nine inches square. The soil, he says, if made into a cube would be bigger than any cathedral in the whole world. Mr. Williams continues:

"Diamonds are so highly prized and so imperishable that the amount of these gems in existence may almost be reckoned as the total of the world's production, ranging in value through hundreds of millions of dollars. Mr. Kunz does not estimate a loss of 5 per cent in a hundred years, and the South African diamond fields alone have contributed over $400,000,000 in value to the world's stock. Yet the demand increases apace with the world's growth in wealth, and no diversion of the world's fancy is apparent."

Of interest, too, is Mr. Williams' story of the search for an automatic diamond sorter, a machine to catch the diamonds automatically as the soil is washed. After numerous failures shaking tables were made of corrugated cast-iron plates in five sections, each thickly coated with grease. It was learned that the diamonds would stick to the grease and that all other minerals would pass over it. Only about one-third of one per cent of the diamonds, Mr. Williams says, is lost by the first table, and these are recovered almost to a stone when the concentrates are passed over the second table.

Mr. Williams goes on: "The discrimination of this sorter is surely marvelous. Native workers, although experienced in the handling of diamonds, often pick out small crystals of zircon, or Dutch boat, by mistake; but the senseless machine is practically unerring. It will catch rubies, sapphires, and emeralds as well as diamonds, but, so far as it has been tested, it will not cling to anything but a precious stone." The grease loses its power after it has been in use a few hours. Then it is scraped off, with the diamonds adhering to it, and steamed. The grease then passes into tanks where it is cooled and is again fit for use.

A Jap who was hanged in Honolulu for murdering his wife made a public apology to his home government for disgracing it. That was certainly handsome and no doubt the Japanese emperor will be greatly comforted by it.

The czar is having a hard time finding a man who will act as premier of Russia. Can you blame the big men for being just a little retiring? How would you like to be the target for a large bomb?

Now comes Senator Burrows who deposes and says he will call up the Smoot case on the first day of the next session of congress. But the senator may change his mind when he sees the election returns from Utah.

Congress has adjourned but, from his retreat at Oyster Bay, the invincible Theodore may be depended upon to keep his hand on the country's life line. Also on the popular pulse.

Oyster Bay will now take its place as the most prominent news center in all the United States. Theodore has gone there for the summer.

Even the insurance magnates can laugh at the packing-house proprietors these days. Nobody is so poor that he cannot laugh at them.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MONDAY was the biggest shopping day in the history of the store except the day before Christmas.

The aisles were crowded. Although there were nearly a hundred extra clerks it was impossible at times to handle the trade.

AS TO THE BARGAINS:

The reductions range from 10% to 50%—most of the discounts being 50% or more. The reductions are reliable ones. Considering that every department has thrown its strength into this unusual sale the round up becomes the biggest mercantile event that probably ever occurred in Salt Lake.
We make no elaborate claims—but every claim made we substantiate.

No old shopworn goods—but a beautiful stock, full of style, full of quality.
There were no disappointments yesterday. The shoppers were satisfied.
